'Sorry for the lives I've taken,' says bomber

Spoken. Dzhokhar Tsarnaev broke his two years of silence Wednesday in a Boston court.

In his own words

- "Allah to bestow mercy upon those I killed and their families."
- "I am guilty of the bombing, let there be no lingering question about that. After the bombing, I learned the victims' names and saw their faces."
- "I also wish more people had the chance to testify. But I took them from you."
- "I am sorry for the lives that I've taken, for the suffering that I've caused you, for the damage I have done, irreparable damage."

Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev broke his silence Wednesday at his formal death sentencing, asking for "Allah to bestow mercy upon those I killed and their families."

"I am guilty of the bombing, let there be no lingering question about that," said Tsarnaev. "After the bombing, I learned the victims' names and saw their faces. I also wish more people had the chance to testify. But I took them from you. I am sorry for the lives that I've taken, for the suffering that I've caused you, for the damage I have done, irreparable damage."

It was the first time the convicted terrorist, 21, had publicly spoken since his April 2013 arrest, save for his July 2013 arraignment in which he verbally pleaded "not guilty."

Tsarnaev scratched his head, fidgeted, cracked his knuckles and infrequently stared at the speakers in federal court where he was formally sentenced to death for his part in the deadly terror attack, but not before he faced the people whose lives he forever changed.

The floor was open for three hours of victim impact statements, strained if not teary accounts included descriptions of brain injuries, hearing loss, shrapnel wounds, amputated limbs, headaches, nightmares, PTSD, surgeries, out-of-pocket payments and unbroken spirits.

Tsarnaev was found guilty in April of carrying out the deadly terror attack, which killed three and injured 264 others; 17 people lost limbs. His late brother, Tamerlan Tsarnaev, was the alleged mastermind of the plot, which they carried out on April 15, 2013. Days later, the men shot MIT police officer Sean Collier to death in an attempt to flee the city.

"I ask Allah to have mercy upon everyone here today, on me and my brother," Tsarnaev said Wednesday.

Tsarnaev will receive lethal injection in Indiana's Terre Haute State Prison, the same facility where Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh was put to death.

Judge George O'Toole told Tsarnaev he followed a "cruel god," not the God of Islam, if he thought God wanted him to kill innocent people.

"No one will remember that your teachers were fond of you, that you were funny, a good athlete," O'Toole said. "Whenever your name is mentioned, what will be remembered is the evil you have done. What will be remembered is that you murdered and maimed. You had to forget your own humanity."

The parents of Martin Richard, 8, who died as a result of his injuries after Tsarnaev placed his bomb directly behind Richard, spoke of choosing love over hate in the face of the violence their family suffered.

"He chose hate. He chose destruction. He chose death," Bill Richard said. "We choose love. We choose kindness. We choose peace. This is our response to hate. That's what makes us different from him."

Witness

Hero cop takes the stand

MBTA Transit Police officer Richard "Dic" Donohue was one of a number of victims and witnesses who took the stand at Tsarnaev's sentencing.

Donohue nearly died after being shot by friendly fire during a shoot-out with the Tsarnaev brothers on the night of April 18, 2013, in Watertown, Massachusetts.

The shoot-out ended with the death of Tamerlan, who was run over by an SUV driven by Dzhokhar as he attempted to speed away from the scene.

On the stand Wednesday, Donohue recalled slain MIT police officer Sean Collier as "special."

"Throughout my recovery, the most gut-wrenching time was when I had to watch my friend Sean's funeral from my hospital bed," said Donohue.

Man brings meat cleaver to protest death penalty

Exclusive. Metro's photographers captured all the drama outside the courtroom Wednesday.

A man was arrested Wednesday after he was caught with a meat cleaver in his car outside the federal courthouse — moments before the Boston bomber apologized at his formal death sentencing.

In a dramatic turn of events exclusively captured by Metro's photographers, police quickly arrested the man — later identified by police as Patrick Carreiro, 24 — after he drove an SUV past the barricades of a Boston court Wednesday. He was found with a large meat cleaver in his possession.

Officers confronted the man when he pulled up in front of the courthouse, a restricted area, in a car without a license plate, according to eyewitnesses and police.

"Officers learned the suspect had driven to the courthouse to express his opposition and dissent with the death penalty," the Boston Police Department later said in a statement.

"A search of the vehicle enabled officers to see and take possession of what appeared to be a meat cleaver. At no point did the suspect use or threaten anyone with the weapon."

Friends of Carreiro, a former student at Framingham State University who worked at the school's student newspaper The Gatepost, were shocked by the incident.

"He's always had his eccentric moments, but nothing like this," said Helen D'Arpino, who said she has known Carreiro since high school. "I'm totally shocked right now."

D'Arpino said she last spoke with him about one week ago and didn't sense any change in him.

"I was texting him the other day," she said. "Just, 'Hey, how's it going?' Nothing out of the ordinary at all."

But another friend said that Carreiro was struggling emotionally and had recently sent him messages that he found worrying.

Joe Kourieh, another friend of Carreiro's who also worked for FSU's student newspaper, said he also spoke with the man just a few days ago.

"I don't think I've ever heard him mention anything about Tsarnaev," Kourieh said. "I have no knowledge of any motivation he would have to disrupt the Tsarnaev hearing."

Carreiro's Facebook page includes infrequent posts about the bombing and Tsarnaev case, including one article about survivors making a plea not to execute him.

"It's not our duty to punish," he wrote on April 17, in a post not specifically linked to the bomber's trial.

His most recent post on Facebook reads: "life could be so much better than our country, world allows."

Carreiro, a sometime painter who appears to have had several freelance jobs in computers and construction and may have worked as a paralegal, did not show signs he was planning the incident, friends said, and never mentioned any special interest in the marathon bombings or the Tsarnaev trial.

Editors note: A reporter who worked on this story was on the Framingham State University school newspaper with Carreiro.

Rapper. Rick Ross arrested near Atlanta on assault charges

Rick Ross / GETTY IMAGES

Rapper Rick Ross and his bodyguard were arrested at his home near Atlanta on Wednesday on charges they kidnapped a man, beat him and threatened him with a handgun earlier this month at the rapper's mansion, authorities and media reports said.

Ross, 39, whose real name is William Leonard Roberts II, and his bodyguard Nadrian Lateef James, 42, were being held at the Fayette County Jail in Georgia on charges of kidnapping, aggravated assault and aggravated battery, a spokesman for the sheriff's office said. Ross and James were denied bail.

Police went to Ross' mansion in Fayetteville, about 20 miles south of Atlanta, which he bought last year and was once owned by boxer Evander Holyfield, at about 6:30 a.m. and initially were denied entrance.

Officers eventually forced the mansion's gate open and the men were taken into custody without further incident, authorities said.

Ross, founder of the Maybach Music Group and known for his 2006 single "Hustlin," was also arrested two weeks ago in Georgia for marijuana possession.

According to the arrest reports and the sheriff's office, Ross and James forced Jonathan Zamudio into a bedroom on June 7 and prevented him from leaving.

Escapees may have guns from cabin hideaway

Convicted killers. They were believed to have been last seen near the cabin in Owls Head, New York, on Saturday.

FBI agents search in Whippleville, New York. / GETTY IMAGES

Convicted killers David Sweat and Richard Matt may have at least one gun from a cache of weapons in an upstate New York cabin where they hid about 20 miles from a maximum security facility, police said on Wednesday.

A bloody sock and other items found at the cabin reportedly owned by corrections officers were tested for DNA, and Guess said police had "100 percent assurance they were in that area."

Authorities have received 2,200 tips from the public, Guess said.

"Just about every cabin or outbuilding in the North Country has one or more shotguns or weapons," Guess said. "They put an inordinate amount of weapons and ammunition and other tools in these shared seasonal hunting camps and cabins."

He said he had no reason to believe the dangerous fugitives would not have tried to arm themselves but can't be sure.

"You would think that they'd have some sort of an inventory," Guess said. But, he added, investigators found "a number of people cycle through these camps and cabins, and they do not have a definitive number of weapons, so they cannot tell us what's missing and what's not."

Matt, 48, and Sweat, 35, cut through the steel walls of their adjoining cells, slipped through a steam pipe and emerged from a manhole outside the prison's fortress-like walls in Dannemora, New York. REUTERS

Man gets eight years for breaking baby daughter's limbs

A Connecticut man convicted of breaking his 4-month-old daughter's arms, legs and ribs was sentenced to eight years in prison on Wednesday, and ordered to take anger management classes and undergo a complete mental evaluation.

"You are either evil and a monster or very, very ill," Judge Maria Kahn told the man, Morice Wilkerson, 26, during a hearing in Superior Court in Bridgeport. Wilkerson broke down in tears as he was removed from the courtroom, and relatives also wailed and sobbed.

Wilkerson was convicted last month of third-degree assault and risk of injury to a minor, after bringing the infant to a hospital in 2012 with all four limbs and two ribs broken.

Church killings. Slain Charleston pastor mourned at South Carolina state capitol

Family and friends look on at the coffin of church pastor and South Carolina State Sen. Clementa Pinckney at the State House./ GETTY IMAGES

The body of Rev. Clementa Pinckney, the state senator and pastor gunned down with eight others at a historic black church in Charleston last week, was taken on Wednesday to the South Carolina capitol to lie in state inside the rotunda.

Pinckney's casket arrived on a horse-drawn military carriage, passing by the hotly disputed Confederate battle flag flying on the State House grounds in Columbia, the state capital. Eight state police officers in dress uniform served as pallbearers.

Gov. Nikki Haley and other politicians came out onto the State House steps to pay their respects to the 41-year-old Democrat, who had been widely admired for the way he blended politics with his faith.

The pastor-politician and eight other black men and women were shot to death during Bible study at the historic Emanuel African Methodist on June 17. Dylann Roof, a 21-year-old white man, has been arrested and charged with all nine murders.

Pinckney's funeral will be held in Charleston on Friday when President Barack Obama is due to deliver the eulogy. First lady Michelle Obama and Vice President Joe Biden are also expected to be in attendance.

The Charleston church attack came after months of intense debate over U.S. race relations following in the wake of killings of unarmed black men by police officers in Ferguson, Missouri; New York City; Baltimore and elsewhere.

It also ignited a political debate over the Civil War-era flag of the South's pro-slavery Confederacy, with mounting calls for the "Stars and Bars" to be removed from the State House grounds, among other places. REUTERS

He gave it a second thought. Man decides to remove his 29 Miley Cyrus tattoos

A man with reportedly 29 Miley Cyrus tattoos, and a presumed serious inability to make proper decisions in life, has had a breakthrough and decided it's time to remove his Miley Cyrus tattoos. Three cheers for good decisions!

The gentleman, a 42-year-old man named Carl McCoid, is apparently a huge fan of the pop star and, in addition to his tattoos, named one of his daughters Miley.

McCoid's tattoos include album titles, song names and three portraits of the "Wrecking Ball" singer.

His many years of bad decision making came to a turning point when the real Miley Cyrus reportedly said in a radio interview with Heat Radio: "There's a dude that holds a record for the most pictures of my face. He has, like, 18 pictures of my face, and they're really ugly!"

Ouch.

Now, because Miley herself has disapproved of the tattoos

Carl McCoid / TWITTER

McCoid has had a change of heart about them as well.

"I'm only regretting them now." McCoid told the Mirror. "I never thought about it too much, but they have had a psychological effect on me. Then she mentioned they were creepy in an interview. It made me realize I didn't like them."

I guess this proves that when it comes to tattoos of Miley Cyrus' face, one can stop and should stop.

1 Sarah Palin ends run as Fox News contributor

Fox News has ended its relationship with former Alaska Governor Sarah Palin as a political contributor.

A Fox News Channel representative on Wednesday confirmed a report on Politico.com that said the cable network had not renewed its contract with the 2008 Republican vice presidential candidate.

Palin, whose conservative stands have made her a favorite of the Tea Party movement, is expected to make occasional guest appearances on the channel, Politico reported.

4 Triassic reptile was 'grandfather' of all turtles

It looked like an odd lizard with a bulky body and only the skeletal precursor of a shell, but scientists say 240-million-year-old fossils unearthed in a quarry in southern Germany represent the grandfather of all turtles.

The scientists on Wednesday announced the discovery of the oldest-known turtle, an 8-inch Triassic Period reptile that combines traits of its lizard-like ancestors with a set of emerging turtle-like features.

They named it Pappochelys, meaning "grandfather turtle."

1 Disney demands a dry Depp

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Johnny Depp has apparently been causing more havoc on the new "Pirates of the Caribbean" set beyond getting into trouble for smuggling terriers. Studio bigwigs reportedly staged an intervention to get Depp to knock off the partying he's been doing and take the job seriously, according to the National Enquirer. "They've told him in no uncertain terms that he needs to clean up his act and concentrate on making the movie. He had a big sit-down with the head of Disney Pictures, as well as producer Jerry Bruckheimer, his agents and a few close friends," a source says. "Basically, they told Johnny he had to get his act together. Johnny apologized to the crew and producers when he finally got back to Australia from L.A." Not only that, he also reportedly hired a sober coach to help him out. None of this, of course, explains why we need another "Pirates of the Caribbean" movie, but I suppose we can't have everything.

2 Bobbi Kristina headed to hospice

It's really not looking good for Bobbi Kristina Brown. While that might seem a bit redundant or something of an understatement, this latest bit of bad news is actually pretty bad. Her family announced this week that she had been moved from a rehabilitation center in Atlanta to a hospice care center. Brown, the daughter of Bobby Brown and Whitney Houston, was first hospitalized Jan. 31 after being discovered unresponsive in the bathtub of her Atlanta-area home.

3 Fat Chris Pratt might come back

Chris Pratt wowed fans by getting into ridiculous shape for "Guardians of the Galaxy" and "Jurassic World," but don't expect the abs to stick around that long, he warns. "I can tell that people are motivated by my transformations, and that feels really good," Pratt tells Men's Health. "But everyone should know when the movie star stuff is over, I might go back to being the fat guy. My wife wants a pizza oven — she's going to learn how to bake bread, and I'm going to eat it." This … is not good news. Someone find that pizza oven and destroy it.

4 The Royals get how much for an allowance?

It must be embarrassing to be an adult and still have an allowance, like Prince William, Prince Harry and Kate Middleton do. But splitting more than $4 million between them probably takes some of the sting out of it. Clarence House released its annual review of Prince Charles' expenditures, and among them are roughly $4.667 million to cover "official activities" of William, Kate and Harry. Unfortunately, there wasn't an itemized breakdown of how the three spend that money, so we can only imagine how much Harry puts toward nightclub floozy hush money. I'm going to go with half.

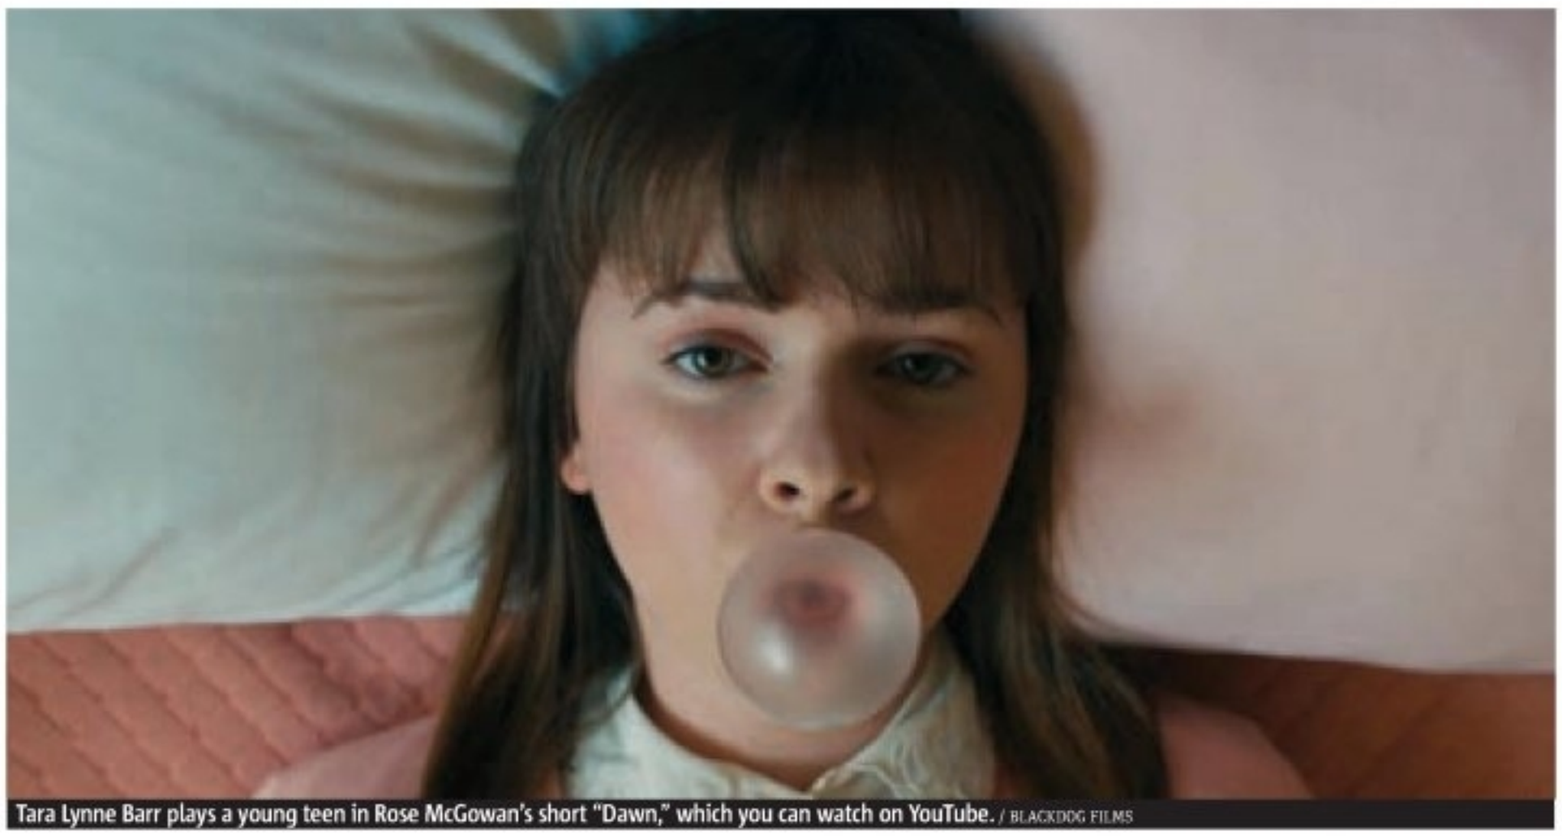
Rose McGowan is a director now

Interview. The actress made an acclaimed short film. And she wants Hollywood to change.



Tara Lynne Barr plays a young teen in Rose McGowan's short "Dawn," which you can watch on YouTube. / BLACKDOG FILMS

At this past Sundance, Rose McGowan wowed audiences with "Dawn," a short film about a young, overprotected girl (Tara Lynn Barr) in 1961 who sneaks off with a possibly dangerous boy. And she's hardly done. The actress of "Scream," "The Doom Generation" and "Charmed" is still acting; as of now, she has five gigs lined up. But she says she feels more at home directing, including the feature "The Pines," now in preproduction. You can watch "Dawn" on her YouTube channel.

You still have acting jobs coming up, but do you feel you have less passion for acting, especially now that you're directing?
The thing is, I never did. I just happened to be good at it. I would get to sets and think, "What happened? I'm in the wrong world." It's like when you read a book and then you see how it's been made on the screen, and it's completely odd to you because that's not at all how you saw it. That's how almost every experience is like to me. I have a very active brain that needs constant data and emotion. And I was dying.

Short films haven't always been easy to market, but right now, with streaming services, it's easier than ever to get shorts seen.
To be honest, when we did it, it didn't occur to me that anybody would see it. I just had to do it. It just didn't occur to me. I do that with the things I've acted in; it doesn't occur to me for me to even go see them. They're just things I did one time and let's move on. But this is actually my voice. It's nice to be heard.

Have you been the type of actor who bugs directors to see how they did it?
No, I watched. I didn't learn from them what to do; I learned what not to do. The directors I liked and respected, they had their own thing. I'm not going to copy it. That's silly. On days I wasn't acting, I would work with the gaffers, I would work with the art department. I did the production design on "Dawn." I have a film education that is second to none. I've spent over 57,000 hours on set. You can't really f— with me.

Someone told you they threw up after watching "Dawn." Was it the intensity of the ending?
It also affects women who were in that era greatly. There was a woman who saw it, and she called me, crying, because that was her life. It's what we do to girls and women without even realizing it — these tiny things we say. You open a magazine and it says "How to Be on a Date," and it's by a little guy in a closet giving you advice. And it f—s you up. We're sending girls into the world, still, largely unprotected and in ways meant to subvert their own survival instinct. So what happens when you're a lamb with your hands tied and you meet a wolf? What happens?

Slammin' Sandler

You went viral the other day for a tweet where you mentioned a script note you got for an Adam Sandler script that noted actresses should have ostentatious cleavage, or at least wear a push-up bra.
That was an accident. I didn't think of it going viral. But that wasn't the part that was offensive to me. That part's just pathetic and stupid. Of course, some chick going for an Adam Sandler movie will get that. It's just redundant and it's old-fashioned and embarrassing — more than anything it's just embarrassing. But the part that made me laugh out loud is where they're like, "Make sure you read the script so you understand the context of the scene." It's an Adam Sandler film! That's the part where you realize they think so little of the people coming in. I'm a pretty progressive sort, so to say I'm from Hollywood is sometimes cringeworthy. I want it to be better because it can be. It's this old, old system that's just tired. We're putting out the No. 1 export. We need to be smarter about it.

Getting inside Pete Docter's head

Sadness and Joy in Pete Docter's "Inside Out." / WALT DISNEY PICTURES

Interview. The "Inside Out" director tries to rescue Pixar's reputation.

It's fair to say that Pixar's Pete Docter takes the notion of Take Your Daughter to Work Day seriously. For his last film as a director, "Up," he let his daughter, Elie Docter, provide the voice of the younger version of the character Ellie. And his latest film, "Inside Out," was inspired by her adolescent mood swings. The good news is she's probably not reading this right now, according to her dad.

Has your daughter gotten fed up with you using her for story material yet?
You know, it's funny. We're not a real media-heavy family, so I'm not sure she's aware of how much I reference her — either at work or talking about her in the press. That's probably a good thing.

But she has seen "Up" and this film, hasn't she?
Yeah, of course. And that's weird. That's really kind of a public thing, to do a voice. I'm not sure she was really aware of what that meant. I think, thankfully, she has not really relied on that in any way. It's not like, "I did the voice in 'Up'!" or anything, so she's just kind of like, "OK, back to work. Back to school." And she first saw this movie when it wasn't quite finished, but she seemed to enjoy it.

DOCTER
GETTY IMAGES

There have been some criticisms that for the last few films, Pixar hasn't really been living up to the high bar it set for itself. Have you felt pressure to make this a kind of return to form?
Obviously we set out to make every film as good as it possibly can be. There was a little more pressure in the last year when they moved "The Good Dinosaur," which was going to be last year, and then there was nothing from the studio and everything turned to us.

The fun part

These Pixar films take a while to make. What is it like on the campus when one of the projects that's further along is having its moment?
When you're still on the bench and you see the guy up at bat, you're kind of a little jealous. Because that's the fun part, when you're through all the struggle and the trials and the tribulations of the story — out of the five years, I've lost more hair over that because the story is always the hard part. Like the Eye of Sauron.

Still hungry for Cibo Matto

Yuka Honda and Miho Hatori aren't done experimenting.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

Yuka Honda and Miho Hatori of Cibo Matto. SEAN LENNON

Fans of Cibo Matto know the duo's name is Italian for "crazy food" and that the two Japanese women in the band truly live up to the name: They wrote odes to cuisine such as birthday cake, beef jerky and artichokes in the mid-'90s. But even now, 10 years later, Yuka Honda, who makes up Cibo Matto along with Miho Hatori, still uses food to explain her music.

"The way we make our music is sort of like cooking," she says. "It's like you say, 'Let's make Indian food' and then you see what's in Indian food. When we make an album, we play [in a similar way] and that's what makes it fun."

Say what?

If you're still scratching your head wondering what Indian food has to do with Cibo Matto's musical process, Honda explains it another way: starting with different ingredients — "groovy beats," computer-programmed drums and lyrics — and putting them together, all connected to the same theme or concept, which is seen in every song on the album.

Cibo Matto's music has lots of layers, blending trip hop, electronica and jazz for their unique sound, and it's their willingness to experiment in new ways that keeps their music from feeling tired. "When we want to explore something new in music, we do it right away," Honda says.

"Something I think what I would like for us to explore next would be full-on dance music," she adds. "We've been making music you can dance to, but it's not full-on dance music."

Transforming on stage

Honda and Hatori are still in tour mode for "Hotel Valentine," which came out Feb. 14, 2014, though Honda says they can currently only tour for about a week at a time since Hatori has a newborn baby.

Despite having performed the same songs for over a year, Honda says their unique meanings haven't changed for her; the title track's sentiment of living in a world but not truly being "seen" is still there. What she and Hatori do change during performances is the musical arrangements, transforming some songs into something that sounds vastly different from how it is on the album.

And touring still hasn't lost its magic. "It's so exciting to go out and play," she says, with the anticipation of someone who hasn't been doing it for over a decade. "We are very excited for this tour."

Pansy Division were one of the premiere bands of the queercore scene in the '90s, a group of punks who were unabashedly out and proud, documenting gay life as they lived it and shooting down stereotypes. Beyond the socio-political dimension, they're also a great punk-pop band, loading their songs with bouncy hooks and clever, storytelling lyrics.

How to 'Bar Rescue' your night out

There are many ways to tell whether you're at a good bar before they even make your first drink. ISTOCK

Jon Taffer tells us when it's time to ditch a dive.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

Nightlife consultant Jon Taffer has seen the worst watering holes on Spike TV's "Bar Rescue" and helped improve their business — occasionally through the use of force. So he knows the warning signs of a sketchy bar when he sees them. Here are his tips for spotting red flags next time you're out on the town.

1 "If there's a bottle of vermouth in sight — in other words, not in the refrigerator — then they don't know what they're doing. Every bottle of vermouth, once it's open, must be refrigerated. It's wine. It will go bad. That's a big problem with bars; they don't know that. If the vermouth isn't in the refrigerator, I wouldn't order anything."

2 "If a back bar is disorganized — just s— is everywhere — that would clearly be a sign."

3 "If you put your hand under the table and it's covered in chewing gum, that might be a good indication [that you should go elsewhere]."

4 "Every bar has a cutting board behind it. They typically are white plastic. If it's brown in the middle, I'm not sure I'd be drinking there, because the brown in the middle is actually a bacteria colony. The fruit wasn't brown when he cut it, and the board wasn't brown when he cut it. What's brown is the bad stuff."

5 "If a menu is sticky or is dirty or has thumbprints on it, obviously that would be a sign."

6 "Music so defines a bar. When you walk into a bar, the music that you hear will tell you all about the people that it wants to have there — or the people that are there. If the music is uncool, then probably the bar isn't going to be cool in your perception."

7 "If you walk into an empty bar, and there's a bartender working there, I often scratch my head. Would any great bartender work in a bar that was empty? The answer is no. So if the place is empty, I'm not sure I'd go much farther than that."

How bad can it get?

Over four seasons of "Bar Rescue," Jon Taffer has rescued hundreds of struggling nightlife spots. But sometimes the task can seem too much even for him. So what's the worst he's ever seen? Hope you have a strong stomach.

"In 'Bar Rescue,' we've seen a lot of disgusting stuff, but to me the most disgusting of all is the bugs and the rats," he says. "I've seen bugs in bottles that took a product that's clear and made it milky, there were so many bugs in it. What's floating around in those jars — and a lot of bars have these bugs — is feces, body parts, skeletons, eggs, colonies. It's fricking disgusting."

Things are cooking in Copenhagen

Tickets went on sale this month for one of the biggest food festivals in Northern Europe. Copenhagen Cooking — www.copenhagencooking.com — takes place every summer. This year it runs from Aug. 21-30.

The festival began in 2004 and now attracts over 100,000 people to the Danish capital. Each year has its own themes, and for 2015 there are two main ones: local sustainability and togetherness. There are going to be plenty of opportunities for social dining experiences, both in restaurants and in the streets, and the Scandinavian love of sustainability will ensure nothing goes to waste. For the visiting traveler, the chance to meet and engage with Danish foodies will make for a truly memorable holiday.

The Copenhagen culinary scene is a vibrant one, from Michelin-star restaurants to street food. In fact, there's even a place called Copenhagen Street Food (www.copenhagenstreetfood.dk/en). It's a daily street food market on Papiroen (Paper Island) where dozens of street food vendors set up stalls, and you can sample typical street food from Turkey, Mexico, China, Japan and, of course, Denmark.

Sample casual cuisine from around the world at the Copenhagen Street Food market on Paper Island.

At the other end of the price scale, Copenhagen has 15 restaurants with Michelin stars, including three with two stars. One of those, Noma, has been called the best restaurant in the world no less than four times by the British magazine Restaurant. Another of the two-star restaurants, Geranium, features the cooking of Rasmus Kofoed, once voted the best chef in the world.

Traditional Danish dishes to try

Smorrebrod

- Rye bread: You'll find rye bread everywhere, from top restaurants to supermarket shelves. It's a healthier and tastier alternative to white bread. A smorrebrod is rye bread buttered and with a topping, for an open-face sandwich.
- Wienerbrod: Don't ask for a Danish in Denmark. If you want a breakfast pastry, ask for a Wienerbrod, or Viennese bread.
- Pork: Pork is the most popular meat, served in dishes like roast pork with parsley sauce or a pork and apple stew.
- Fish: Denmark has 4,500 miles of coastline — almost as much as India — and fish dishes are everywhere, from smoked eel and pickled herring to salted dried cod (lutefisk).
- Beer: Denmark is noted for its beer, with big names like Tuborg and Carlsberg, but the craft brewing scene is definitely booming, and there are over 100 breweries to choose from.

The wild ponies of Chincoteague

CAMERON DAVIDSON

CHINCOTEAGUE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Pony swim

The annual pony swim and auction of horses living on Assateague Island celebrate their 90th anniversary in July.

Made famous by the classic children's novel "Misty of Chincoteague," the annual roundup and swim of the horses that live on Assateague Island, off the Maryland and Virginia coasts, is a tradition. About 150 feral horses live on Assateague Island. Some say the ponies descended from survivors of shipwrecked Spanish galleons. Others, that the original ponies wandered away while grazing.

Their only human contact is with The Saltwater Cowboys, a group of volunteers who monitor them. Each July, the ponies are gathered to make the five-minute swim across the channel between Assateague and Chincoteague Island, Virginia. The following morning, the foals are auctioned, to maintain the herd at a size that can thrive on the island. The money raised supports the Volunteer Fire Department. This year's event starts July 25-26 with the roundup. Visitors can watch from the National Wildlife Refuge access road. At dawn on July 27, the horses are led down the beach to a communal corral where they rest for a day. It's beautiful, but be sure to reach the beach early.

The volunteer Saltwater Cowboys lead the ponies on their swim.

The Pony Swim on July 29 attracts 40,000 people, all crowding the shoreline. A shuttle runs from the only parking area; again, early is the name of the game. The swim comes at slack tide, when there is no current, sometime between 7 and 11 a.m. The auction on July 30 starts at 8 a.m. Prospective buyers must prove they can properly care for the pony before the sale is final. The following morning, the adult horses swim back across the channel for another year of grazing. Most hotels require several nights' stay during Pony Penning Week. The website www.chincoteague.com has a Pony Penning Guide. INSIGHT GUIDES | FRAN SEVERN

Letters to the editor

The war was not the problem

Re: 'Consign the Confederate flag to a museum' (Metro, June 24) While I can hardly disagree with letter writer Gregory Harvey's conclusion that the Confederate flag should be consigned to museums, I take issue with his reason: That "no former adversary should be permitted to have their flag raised on public property." Should we therefore ban the display of, say, the British, Italian and Japanese flags? The Nazi flag is taboo not just because we fought a war with Nazi Germany but because it was a war against genocide and depraved oppression, and because it is used as a rallying symbol by violent zealots.

It's important not to let revisionists recast the Civil War as "a war for states' rights," a position that has been thoroughly debunked by mainstream historians who point out the instances in which the slave states opposed the rights of other states to limit slavery. The Civil War was about slavery, the flag of the Confederacy is inseparably associated with the cause of slavery, and that flag is being used as a rallying symbol by violent zealots. Those are the reasons to banish it to historical museums.

Get rid of remaining coal

Pope Francis knows what he is talking about (whether or not you believe he is infallible) when he blames "political shortsightedness" among other factors for the destruction of the environment. One doesn't need to be Catholic to know that coal is a dirty fossil fuel and the remaining coal plants in the state should be permanently shut down. Investing in clean, renewable, sustainable energy will not only provide jobs, but a chance at long-term survival of the human race.

Celtics expected to deal

NBA. It's more likely that the Celtics will move from No. 16 in tonight's NBA Draft than stand pat.

Take a good look at the NBA's draft order for Thursday's NBA Draft. Now, forget the whole thing.

The chances are strong that a good number of the teams slotted to pick where they are currently will be picking from a different spot — or picking in that same spot but for another team — once things really get underway in Brooklyn.

We've heard plenty of rumors leading up to Thursday, including the increased likelihood that Sacramento's DeMarcus Cousins will be on the move, the interest the Knicks have in trading out of the No. 4 spot and the aggressiveness of the Celtics as they try to make something happen.

What we do know: Karl-Anthony Towns and Jahlil Okafor are the likely top two picks in this year's draft. Everything else appears to be up for grabs.

"Right now, we don't know where we are drafting, what position we'll be in," Celtics President of Basketball Operations Danny Ainge told reporters on Tuesday. "There's going to be a lot of activity on draft night. So stay tuned. Our draft pick may have been traded before we even make the pick. So I'm excited about the draft. It's going to be fun."

Some experts have predicted international prospect Kristaps Porzingis to go as high as No. 3 after very strong predraft workouts. Kentucky's Willie Cauley-Stein has been slated anywhere from No. 5 to No. 11.

Could the success of the Warriors with Stephen Curry and Klay Thompson prompt a team to take Georgia State sharpshooter R.J. Hunter earlier than some think? There are still tons of questions to be answered in what has turned out to be a deep draft — deeper than last year's and expected to be deeper than next year's, too.

We can be sure the Celtics will have their hand in something. Ainge has already gone on the record as saying he doesn't want to make all four Celtics picks. And the C's have been quite active in recent drafts.

Who can forget the franchise-altering trade in 2013 that sent Paul Pierce and Kevin Garnett to Brooklyn? They also traded up for Kelly Olynyk that day. In 2011, they swapped first round picks with the Nets, acquiring JaJuan Johnson (hey, nobody said they always make good trades).

Love story

Forward Kevin Love will opt out of his contract with Cleveland, making him a free agent.

- Yahoo! Sports reported Wednesday that if Love goes forward with visits to teams other than the Cavaliers in July, the Celtics are expected to sell him on pursuing a group that includes Robin Lopez and Paul Pierce.

D'Angelo Russell is expected to go in the top five, and the Celtics are said to have their eye on the combo guard. / GETTY IMAGES

2015 NBA Mock Draft | by Metro staff

No. 1

Karl-Anthony Towns

After months of speculation, the Timberwolves go with the player most pundits have identified as the best of this particular draft class.

No. 2

Jahlil Okafor

He's great in the post and Los Angeles could have a lethal inside-outside game in 2015-16 with Kobe looking to end his NBA career in style.

No. 3

D'Angelo Russell

Sam Hinkie is in the asset-acquiring business and Russell is a hell of an asset. Russell could ultimately be Penny Hardaway v. 2.0.

No. 4

Emmanuel Mudiay

Mudiay was the early favorite for the Knicks when they got stuck with this pick, but he's slipped in the minds of draftniks in recent weeks.

No. 5

Justise Winslow

He's a great athlete who checks all the boxes for size, speed and athleticism. But he can coast at times and isn't yet a consistent scorer.

No. 6

Kristaps Porzingis

Every draft has an international man of mystery and most times, it doesn't work out. Draft folk have been drooling over this "Dirk-like" figure.

No. 7

Mario Hezonja

It will be hard to pass up a guy who was considered Europe's best prospect just two years ago. Denver can't get picky by position.

No. 8

Devin Booker

Sharpshooting is in style thanks to the Warriors. Booker is dynamite behind the stripe, but he could fall due to a lack of athleticism.

No. 9

Willie Cauley-Stein

If there is no trade before No. 9, the first swap will happen here. Cauley-Stein's defense is coveted by many teams behind Charlotte.

No. 10

Frank Kaminsky

If Chris Bosh returns healthy to Miami, and the Heat draft Kaminsky ... hello matchup problems! That's on offense. Defensively? Another story.

No. 11

Myles Turner

Like Cauley-Stein, Turner is a true disruptor around the basket as his 7-foot-4 wingspan and 9-foot-4 reach could be a big help for Indiana.

No. 12

Sam Dekker

Dekker is the type of player that doesn't make mistakes, but he'll never exactly "wow" you. Utah may trade out of this spot.

Quick picks

- 13. Suns: Kelly Oubre, SF, Kansas
- 14. Thunder: Cameron Payne, PG, Murray State
- 15. Hawks: Stanley Johnson, SF, Arizona
- 16. Celtics: Trey Lyles, PF, Kentucky
- 17. Bucks: Bobby Portis, PF, Arkansas
- 18. Rockets: Kevon Looney, PF, UCLA
